THE NEWLY DISCOVERED MOSQUITO DESTROYER

IT IS A HAIR-LIKE WORM WHICH IN ONE STAGE OF ITS EXISTENCE SEEKS THE LARVAE OF MOSQUITOES AND ENTERS THE ABDOMINAL CAVITY CAUSING THE DEATH OF ITS HOST.

Rene Bach contributes the following to the Examiner:

The official announcement that Nature's own mosquito destroyer has at last been found, may, perhaps, be ranked as the greatest single achievement of the United States Government scientists. It is a little worm—the special enemy of the dreaded singing bloodsucker—and evidently provided by nature for the express purpose of keeping down its numbers. So fatal in its attack that in the opinion of science it has only to be properly encouraged by simple and easy means in order to wipe out the winged scourge.

Thus far everything along the line of experiment has turned out satisfactorily where all conditions have been favorable for the breeding of Agamomermis—the mosquito destroyer. But there is much more for the Government scientists to do and they are busily pursuing their study of the little parasite.

The well-known rule of nature that every creature has its natural enemy is assumed to apply to the little Agamomermis. The fact that in some seasons and in some ponds there are varying quantities of the little worm indicates that their abundance is dependent upon some circumstances of season, or weather, or temperature, or food, or the abundance or lack of whatever may be found to be nature's enemy of the worm. The labors of the scientists are now directed toward researches and inquiries on all these points.

Just as it has been discovered that this parasite is the mortal enemy of the mosquito the government experts expect at any moment to find some minute creature which is the natural and fatal enemy of the mosquito destroyer. The moment this creature is identified the experts must start in and study him with minutest care to find out how he can be suppressed. Here again, as in the case of the mosquito, his enemy must be found and encouraged to breed as abundantly as possible. This, then, logically entails the searching for the enemy of the enemy of the enemy of the mosquito, with a view to suppressing him—"and so on ad infinitum," in the words of the poet.

It is easy to see that the work of the Government Bureau by no means ends with the discovery of Agamomermis. It is but the starting point of a most interesting and minute series of studies and examinations of low life in the mud bottoms and waters of our ponds. Nor must it be expected that instantly with the announcement that the enemy of the mosquito has been identified will come the sudden end of the mosquito pest. It was years after the scientists made the acquaintance of the curious little fungus which turned out to be the deadly enemy of the grasshopper before the Government Bureau of Entomology found itself able to actually ship thousands of bottles of these little germs to the farmers throughout the West to be sprinkled about in the grasshopper infested territories. But when the crusade once began the end of the grasshopper had come forever.

The mosquito problem has assumed a vastly increased importance within the last half dozen years, owing to the discovery that mosquitoes are the sole agents by which malaria and yellow fever are conveyed. On this account investigators in various parts of the world have been making most minute and elaborate microscopic studies of the inside works of these insects, and, incidentally to their researches, they have come across several parasitic animals that live within the body of the stinging gnat—most of them tiny worms, quite harmless to human beings.

One of these worms, discovered by Dr. Charles Wardell Stiles, is the mosquito destroyer referred to. It spends part of its life, while it is as yet not fully developed, in the abdominal cavity of the insects, and, while thus sheltered, works such havoc with the physical economy of its unwilling host that the latter soon becomes sick and eventually dies. Here, then, as it would appear, is found the most important natural enemy of the mosquito. As such it is necessarily to be regarded as a friend to mankind, and too much cannot be done in the way of cultivating it.

This, in fact, is precisely what is going to be done. The little worm is to be taken in hand and propagated, with a view to utilizing its energies for the wholesale destruction of mosquitoes. It will be a case of using a plague to fight a plague, somewhat in the same manner as has been done already by the Government in Colorado and other parts of the West, where chinchbugs and grasshoppers have been inoculated with fungous diseases on a wide scale. However, in this instance the agency employed is to be not a plant (all fungi are plants), but an animal—humble, it is true, but, if scientific testimony has any value, a willing and most efficient worker in a great cause.

Dr. Stiles, it should be explained, is a helminthologist—which means that the study of worms is an important part of his business. He is employed by the Public Health and Marine Hospital Service to look up all sorts of animal parasites and find out about their habits. So it came right in his way to make the remarkable discovery here described, and to bestow the long name of Agamomermis upon the mosquito destroyer—a thread-like worm (so he describes it), half an inch long, which looks more like a bit of a horsehair than anything else, and which appears to depend upon the mosquito for a home during the larval period of its existence, though its breeding is accomplished outside, in the mud of the bottom of pond or swamp.

The worm, when it has attained its full development, leaves the body of the insect and buries itself in the soft mud at the bottom of the pond or swamp, where it coils itself up into a knot together with a lot of other worms of its own kind. Several different sorts of worms belonging to the same "group" have this curious habit, from which one genus takes the name of Gordius—referring to the fabled Gordian knot. By-and-by the mosquito destroyer—the female, that is to say—lays its eggs, which have the form of a soft white cord. The cord breaks up into segments, and presently the tiny young ones, resembling delicate threads, are hatched.

Coming out in the water, the baby worm proceeds to hunt for a mosquito larva. If it is a stagnant pond or swamp, large numbers of immature mosquitoes, commonly called "wrigglers," are sure to be swimming about, and before long the destroyer tackles one of them entering its body and making itself comfortable in its abdominal cavity. Feeding upon the vital fluids of the insect, it waxes big and strong at the expense of the latter, and pretty soon the unfortunate "skeeter" begins to sicken. The malady, of course, is incurable, and after a while Mr. Clue dies miserably.

Pursuing his microscopical study, Professor Stiles made the further interesting discovery that the newly-hatched worm, which is only about a twentieth of an inch long, attaches itself to the body of the larval mosquito by boring through the soft tissue of the latter until it reaches the abdominal cavity. It is blind, he found, with hardly any internal structure beyond a mouth and an alimentary canal. The duration of its life seems to depend somewhat upon circumstances, but probably does not exceed three weeks—during which period it is hatched from the egg, spends from six days to two weeks in the body of the mosquito, and completes the cycle of its being in the mud at the bottom of the pond or swamp.

LIQUOR LAWS AND CONGRESS

THE MATTER OF TERRITORIAL REGULATIONS IS PASSED UP TO CONGRESS.

Mainland ignorance about Hawaii and Hawaiians was illustrated by a copy of a debate in the 56th Congress, introduced in Judge Gear's court this morning by Biting, as a part of his argument in support of the contention that there are no liquor laws at all in the Territory of Hawaii at the present time. In the course of the congressional debate one of the members made the remark that he supposed the natives of Hawaii were like the Africans, and ought to be looked after similarly in the matter of liquor regulations.

There were protests from all over the House and the member, Representative Gillett of Massachusetts, was compelled to practically abandon his position. His amendment, which was to provide in the Organic Act that there should be no saloons in Hawaii, was voted down. The record was produced in court this morning to show the intent of Congress in the matter. Congress finally provided that no liquor should be sold in Hawaii except as provided by the Territorial legislature. The legislature hasn't made any provision yet, hence it is argued that there are no existing laws to allow the sale of liquor. As a last proposition it is contended that anybody may sell all the liquor he wants because there is nothing to enforce the Organic Act in this respect and no penalty for violating it.

These contentions were brought forward some time ago but have never got into the circuit court till now. The late Judge Wilcox once had the matter argued before him, but declined to declare the laws void and no appeal was taken. The question is now raised in the case of the Territory against Simoes, charged with selling liquor without a license and Judge Gear took the matter under advisement.

LOOKING FOR STOLEN GOODS.

Manager Ballentyne of the Rapid Transit Company accompanied by Police Officer Mullettner visited the shop of Mr. Jordan on King and Punchbowl streets last Saturday. Ballentyne asked Jordan if he did not have some bolts and iron there. Ballentyne asked to see them saying he thought the stuff belonged to the Rapid Transit Company. Jordan stated that the material had been purchased from Cotton and Neill, so Ballentyne did not press the matter further or ask to have Jordan taken into custody. Ballentyne announced in the shop that he had been misinformed and left the place making no attempt to see the articles.
